Family Talk Time Celebrating Sunday for Catholic Families: Sara McGinnis Lee
St. Peter is the Church's first pope. He was graced with the recognition that Jesus is the Christ. Who is our current pope? How does he continue Jesus' work today?

Reflecting on the Word:

If we, with Peter, profess that Jesus is the Son of the living God, then our lives must change. If we truly believe that God has sacrificed everything, even life, out of love for us, then we who are made in the image and likeness of God are called to do the same. That radical love can hurt, it will upset our lives and make us less comfortable. But when we love as Christ loves, we build up his church. In daring to proclaim who Jesus is, we also profess our own selves: Who am I? Who am I called to be?

Living the Word:

In 2016 Pope Francis wrote Amoris Laetitia to advise the Church on how to care for families. He reflects deeply on the meaning of love in the day-to-day reality of family life. Discuss with your spouse how you are raising your children to be Christians. How does our family teach Christian values? How do we teach them to be sensitive to others' sufferings?

AUBURN AREA CATHOLIC SCHOOL

Clark Switalski, Principal

This week school will start on Tuesday. We are very excited and looking forward to the beginning of a new school year. The teachers have been preparing all summer for this one week. It will be quite different in some respects but similar in others. The parents will not be entering the building, the students will have their temperatures checked daily and there will be more mitigation strategies to space children and keep them as safe as possible.

This week, Jesus asks the disciples who they really think he is and Simon Peter tells him that he is the Christ, living Son of God. This test was a cementing point where Jesus chooses Peter to lead his Church after his death and resurrection. Whenever we have a test, it seems as though it is almost always placed in a pass/fail format where we will either show that we have the information or not. Jesus offers us another type of test daily. While there is a right answer, our God offers us chances over and over to make up for our wrongs by forgiving us for our mistakes. No matter what you have done, God is willing to forgive, as long as you have the humility to seek forgiveness and truly be sorry.

✝ God Bless

Authority is the focus of today's scripture readings—authority conferred, authority revoked, authority abused in the service of self and authority used rightly, in the service of the kingdom. By definition, the word authority means: (1) the power to enforce laws, exact obedience, command, determine or judge; (2) one who is vested with this power; (3) power assigned to another; (4) an accepted source of expert information or advice (The American Heritage Dictionary) Etymologically, our English word authority is rooted in the Latin word auctorem or auctor, which means “enlarger,” “founder” or. More literally, “one who causes to grow.” Therefore, it could be said that those on whom authority has been conferred are vested with the power and the responsibility to help others grow. Unfortunately, and as is reflected in today's first reading from Isaiah, some, Like Shebna, do not use their authority appropriately and, for that reason, their authority may be better exercised by another.

In today's Gospel, the Evangelist tells his readers how Peter's authority was conferred. Notice that Peter was not asked to compile his curriculum vitae listing his job skills and education. He was not required to present references or recommendations. Jesus was not conducting a job interview on that long-ago day, in the Caesarea Philippi; he was enlisting the help and loyalty, the love and service of a friend. To that end, preparing him for the authority that would be his, Jesus asked Peter one question: “Who do you say I am?”

Peter's response was forthright and unequivocal: “You are the Messiah; you are the Son of the living God!” That response was, in effect, Peter's curriculum vitae. Peter's knowledge of Jesus and his true and intimate awareness of Jesus' purpose and mission was what prepared him for the authority being given to him. That same intimate knowledge of Jesus and his mission is what prepares all others who share in that authority. Such knowledge and such a loving relationship keep one mindful of who the “boss” really is and enable those who represent the “Boss” before others to do so faithfully, humbly and without self-importance.

Job Performance: (Isaiah 22) Celebration

Anyone who has ever lost a job can commiserate with Shebna. If the job was forfeited because of poor performance, then our understanding of his predicament is even keener. Shebna, called here “master of the palace” and described in other translations as “royal steward,” “majordomo” “treasurer” and “prime minister,” served as a high official in the royal court of Hezekiah at the end of the eighth century B.C.E. In that capacity, Shebna wielded considerable power, with the authority to grant or to deny access to the king. His special position in the court was evidenced in the large key that he wore on his shoulder.

The prophet Isaiah challenged Shebna's position and his right to wear the key. As the royal prophet, Isaiah had advised Hezekiah and his predecessors to avoid foreign alliances and remain faithful to the one alliance that truly mattered—the covenant with God. Shebna, on the other hand favored the alliance of Judah with Egypt to fend off the Assyrians, and he encouraged Hezekiah to make it so.

Although it was probably this disagreement that led Isaiah to push for the replacement of Shebna, other reasons are also given in Isa 22:16-18. Shebna had behaved in a manner inappropriate for a steward by erecting an elaborate tomb for himself on a high place and by collecting costly chariots, Isaiah regarded such behavior as unworthy of an advisor of the king and delivered the oracle against Shebna that constitutes today's first reading.

Paul's Prayer: (Romans 11)

Celebration

In the course of Romans 9-11, Paul had conducted himself like a seasoned attorney; he had set forth his position clearly and convincingly, and then cinched his case with a powerful and effective closing argument. He had done all he could to convince his fellow Jews to accept Jesus as the Savior they had long awaited. He offered every opportunity for them to acknowledge that God's plan of salvation had begun with the people of Israel and was then extended, through them, to all the peoples of the earth. Having exhausted all his options and arguments, Paul then sat back to await God's action and God's judgement. This hymn beautifully expresses Paul's surrender of his will and his desires for his fellow Jews to God's greater wisdom. Also acknowledged in these verses is Paul's belief that God can and does use negatives, such as Israel's rejection of Jesus, in inscrutable ways to accomplish the divine purpose.

Keys of the Kingdom: (Matthew 16)

Celebration

Whatever its literary context, this Gospel is central to the understanding that the church is not a mere human institution but rather one whose architect is Jesus: “I will build.” This does not mean that Jesus would necessarily recognize the church of the 21st century as his own, but that the concept originated with him of a community of believers brought together in faith, empowered by grace and commissioned for service.

What remains quite amazing, is the willingness of Jesus to entrust the community we call church to such flawed vessels. Here Peter is stellar; in but a few verses he will be called “Satan” by Jesus for his refusal to grasp the mysterious manner, in which God was to affect the salvation of sinners: through rejection, suffering and the cross.

As each of us follows Peter in moving from stellar to shame-faced and from saint to Satan, we are also to remember that certain keys have been entrusted to each of us. For that reason, it behooves us to use those keys to open rather than close the way to Jesus. If our ministry is truly to be a continuation of Jesus' ministry, then we should open more doors than we close, build more bridges than we burn, welcome more people than we turn away and serve more people than we refuse. Only then can we be more stellar than shame-faced.

Call It What It Is:

Fr. James Smith, Celebration

Sin is a lack of goodness, a missing of the mark, a falling short. Which means that we cannot do anything completely evil. There is always some goodness, no matter how small, in everything we do. And that is what saves us. That little spark of goodness is the foothold from which we scramble back to safety.

That little speck of goodness is a handhold for God, a little pocket of grace waiting for us to change our mind, to recognize what we have really done, to be sorry. That is in fact what repentance is: It is to call sin by its right name. Up until that moment, we have been calling it something good, or at least good for us.

When we sin, God waits, and grace hangs around, and we mellow a little and our passion for whatever it was cools off, and we feel guilty, maybe even somewhat silly. We begin to realize that it wasn't a very good thing after all. In fact, it was a bad thing. In truth, it was a sin.

Just as soon as we admit this truth, then goodness is free to go to work. The pocket of grace overflows, floods all of us, and we become good again. And we are good. Maybe a little bent and tarnished, but basically good. So good that we have no choice but to choose good things. Oh course, we can kid ourselves about what good is, but it is a measure of our goodness that we would have to lie to ourselves to do something bad.

“With Peter, I profess Jesus is Christ,
Son of the living God”
